London Stock Markets were steady yesterday, but the session was uneventful. The growing evidence of economic and financial straits in Germany are being closely watched in financial centres. Money was in moderate demand early at 4.4½ per cent, but the rate afterwards fell to 3½ per cent. for day-to-day advances. Discount rates were practically unchanged. In Dublin Stock Market Dublin Distillers Preference were strong, and rose to lers Preference were strong, and rose to 35s. West and East.

The German attack upon Verdun has been renewed for the third and, we may hope and believe, the last time. It is taken up again at the point where it was broken off at the end of the second phase—on the west bank of the Meuse, against that section of the French positions of which the lower slopes to the north of this height the Germans have gained a footing, capturing, as they claim, over a thousand prisoners; but they have so far been unable to develop this advantage against the French counter-attacks. It is morthal to appreciate the fact that on this west bank of the Meuse the French are not yet standing, as they do the first more plain than ever. Nobody can maintain that all the single men still lurking in reserved occupations are legitimate exceptions to the general rule of "single men first." Neither Lord Derby nor Lord Kitchener hesitated to say that men are evading the Military Service Act. Nevertheless, the earlier summoned to the Colours, and others were on the point of being summoned when summoned to the Colours, and others were on the point of being summoned when summoned to the Colours, and others were on the point of being summoned when summoned to the Colours, and others were on the point of being summoned when summoned to the Colours, and others were on the point of being summoned when the Government took fright at the probable effect in the country. What that effect might be they can judge from the appearance at two by-elections of candidates pledged to ght the Coalition manufacturers onsidered they were at a great disadvantage in obtaining access to the necessary information to enable them to tender for War Office supplies, as all samples and specifications were only to be seen at proposed the suppliers of the Meuse the suppliers and testing dept for Irish manufacturers, but would also enable to be of service to the War Office by supplying their requirements to a much supplying their requirements to a much supplying their requirements to a much supplying their requirements to a m against the French counter-stateks. It is important to appressize the fact that on this west bank of the Mense the French are not yet standing, as they do not the cast bank, on their main line of resistance. The Mort Homme height considerable that the same of the sast bank, on their main line of resistance. The Mort Homme height considerable that the same of the sast bank, on their main line of resistance. The Mort Homme height considerable that the same of the sast bank, on their main line of the sast bank of the Meuse, relies on a main defensive position about two miles in rear of the Mort Homme—the ridge of Charny, which prologs the line of the plateaux of Vaux and Douaumont on the other side of the river. Until the attack is is renewed against these plateaux on the east bank, the security of Verdun is not in question. For the present the resumption of the German effort is chiefly important as evidence of the main deave with miles and the sast bank, or until it reaches the ridge of Charny on the west bank, the security of Verdun is not in question. For the present the resumption of the German effort is chiefly important as evidence of the bank place of the control of the sast bank, or until it reaches the ridge of Charny on the west bank, the security of Verdun is not in question. For the present the resumption of the German effort is chiefly important as evidence of the bank place of the control of the sast particular of the plateaux of Vaux and Douaumont on the other side of the plateaux of Vaux and Douaumont on the other side of the plateaux of Vaux and Douaumont on the other side of the plateaux of Vaux and Douaumont on the other side of the plateaux of Vaux and Douaumont on the other side of the plateaux of Vaux and Douaumont on the other side of the plateaux of Vaux and Douaumont on the other side of the plateaux of Vaux Verdun is held or not held, the French front will not be breached; and, if it is konour was involved, and it has not not breached, the desperate gamble on which Germany has staked her whole is me level before the pledge—for to a man of Lord Derby's stamp, the spirit is no less than the letter.

It is in evidence before Verdun, where in certain depleted units effectives have been replenished to the proportion of one-third by men of the 1916 classmen, that is, who are only this year attaining military age, a class which France has not yet begun to use at all. It is in evidence still more palpably in the whole situation in the east. There is in the events in the east an implication which Germany desires us, and neutrals with us, to overlook in our concentration upon the events before Verdun. It is this—that, while Germany is in the act of making her supreme bid for victory in the west, already she has virtually abdited and considered with the supreme bid for victory in the west, already she has virtually abdited and considered with the suprementation the part of the Government.

The list which we print to day tells of was groups that have doned that her print to day tells of many magnificent deeds that have doned that her provided that her with us, to overlook in our concentration upon the events before Verdun. It is this—that, while Germany is in the act of making her supreme bid for victory in the west, already she has virtually abdicated her pretensions in the east. In the Balkans and further afield in the Orient there are visible signs of such an abdication. Compare the situation in the east as it is with that situation of which Germany conjured up a vision when she committed herself last autumn to her adventure into the Balkans and beyond. A period of less it has six months has wrought a dramatic changes. Agong the prospers the prospers to pick and choose, but typical deeds are those of Captain Grenfell, of the Royal Try thanking Grenf Billis, and three machine guns and one gun found.

153 FLEET STREET, LONDON, WEDNESDAY NIGHT. The proceedings in the House of Con mons during the question hour to-day were almost the exact opposite of yesterpassing hour. The Prime Minister was again absent, and Mr. Lloyd George can in to lead the House. The small excite ments of the afternoon were divided by Mr. Ginnell and the malcontents below small countries for whom we are fighting. This raised the ire of mem who shouted: "Don't you know Serbia and Ireland?" wer and over again. Mr. Lloyd George said that the Government Secretary to the Treasury informed Mr. Ginnell that the Government had not decided to withdraw the grants for training teachers in Ireland.

Questions proper disposed of, it was expected that there would be some private expected that there would be some private notice interrogations, but nobody rose, and the House proceeded with the Army Estimates, Sir Arthur Markham taking the floor. It is a pity that Sir Arthur Markham is so excitable. His rather foolish attack upon the Prime Minister, who "sticks to nothing except his salary," evoked a storm of indignation throughout the House. This put Sir Arthur out of his stride, and nearly caused him to break down. Otherwise, he had some quite sensible things to say regarding the necessity of getting the single shirkers out of the reserved industries where they were sheltering. There are thousands of men in the mines who are working only two or three days a week.

In the Lords the same subject was dealt.

In the Lords the same subject was dealt with exhaustively by Lord Derby. He declared that everything possible was being done to fulfil the pledge of the Prime Minister to the married men, and he read a letter from Mr. Long detailing the steps taken by the various Governof these occupations unless he was gaged in it before August of last year. Lord Derby made it clear, however, t

Both candidates have issued their addresses, and each gives special prominence to the attested married men's question. Mr. Harris says no married men ought to be called up until the single men have been dealt with, and Mr. Bowles denounces what he describes as a grave breach of faith on the part of the Government.

Mr. Percy Harris, addressing a meeting of attested married men at Fleckney last night, claimed that before Mr. Bowles arrived in the in the first place the position in reference to questions connected with the Army created agitation, for a

In answer to a question put on the subject to answer to a question put on the subject to day by Sir John Lonsdale, the Presiden of the Board of Trade referred the hon gentleman to an answer he had given at previous sitting. THE PLEDGE.

Speeches do not fulfil pledges, says The Times, and it will take a good deal more to satisfy the magned groups than Lord Derby's exhaustive statement of his own position. Lord Derby protested with great earnestness that all in his power has been done, is being done, and will be done to secure the fulfilment of the pledge. The protest is quite unneeded. There is no hint of an imputation upon his personal honour, and no question about his efforts to have the pledge fulfilled. Lord Derby made one general proposal which may help to enlighten the Government. Up to now they have suffered numbers of married men fit for service to take shelter in restricted occupations, from which they are now striving to dig them out. Lord Derby would have the whole of this system reversed at a stroke. He would recruit on the assumption that the first duty of every single man who is of military age is his military duty. Every such man should be held liable to serve, and the burden of proving that he is entitled to exemption should be cast upon him and the industry in which he is engaged. It is folly to wage a great war through an unwieldy Cabinet, with no strong co-ordinating hand upon the helm.

The bombardment continued with intensity in the whole of the sector, and was energetically met by our critilery.

There has been no important event to report on the right side of the Meuse or in the Woevre, where the cannonade has been intermittent on both sides.

The night was calm on the rest of the front.

GERMAN FAILURE AT

Mr. G. H. Perris, the Paris correspondent of the Daily Chronicle, telegraphing last night, says—At Vaux yesterday afternoon, after a heavy artillery preparation, a new phase of the battle of Verdun was opened by an infantry assault on the short French front west of the Meuse, between Bethincourt and the Cumieres ridge, a distance of about three miles. By 6.30 p.m. the German ranks had been repulsed everywhere, except at two points of the trenches, between Bethincourt and the nearest slope of Dead Man Hill. This was the sole result of an attack prepared during a nause of 62 hours, an attack, it is true, fully anticipated on the French side. Everyone was prepared for something less favourable.

Mr. Herbert Samuel, in response, said, in regard to a Minister of Commerce, he should not, he thought, be guilty of any breach of Cabinet confidence if he told them that the subject was under consideration. (Laughter) When the war was over the country would be faced by some of the gravest and most difficult problems that statesmanship had ever been called upon to solve. "Those problems," said Mr. Samuel, "will demand the most careful and anxious consideration."

The whole Empire is now affected by decisions of policy which are made by a Government and Parliament not responsible to the people of the whole Empire, but to the electors of these two islands alone. That is in contradiction to the whole spirit of the British Constitution. (Hear, hear.) I speak my own firm conviction when I say that the Mother Country is yery ready to admit the Dominions into a share of the decisions of policy as soon as they desire such admission. (Cheers.) The Chairman proposed "Our Guest," and the toast was honoured with enthusiasm.

TURCO-GERMAN INTRIGUES

WITH THE SENUSSI.

WITH THE SENUSSI.

Reuter's Agency has received from an authoritative source the following interesting details of Turco-German intrigues with the Senussi and other tribesmen, and an explanation of their failure, with the occupation of Sollum, on the western frontier of Egypt:—

Turco-German attempts to engage the Grand Senussi's adherents in an Islamic attack on English infidels in Egypt have been ecotched. As is well known, the Senussi, like the Dalai Lama is head of a network of convents or confraternities stretching over the Sahara, and especially the Cyrenaica Hinterland. They are in the main contemplative, and their arms and weapons are only for defence. In 1911, during the Turco-Italian war, Enver Pasha endeavoured to inoculate the Senussi with the Bernhardi principles of aggressive militarism. He failed, though he succeeded in organising a certain resistance among the Cyrenaica tribesmen. After peace with Italy, many of the sons and relatives of the chiefs were taken to Constantinople with a view to instilling into thea Young Turk ideals, and on the outbreak of the great war, when the wine-drinking Young Turks proclaimed a Moslem holy war, Enver Pasha's brother, Nari Bey, with some Germans, smuggled Maxims and rifles into the Cyrenaica Hinterland, when they endeavoused, by bribery, false statements, and a show of force, to induce the Grand Senussi and his peorle to follow the Turk in his jihad against the

THE PLEDGE TO MARRIED MEN.

There had been a great deal of criticism about the Derby scheme, the pledge to married men, and the action of the Government in regard to the pledge. Many political memories appeared to be very short, and he confessed he had listened with surprise to the charge that the Government had broken their pledge to the married men. He had a copy of the pledge on the table, and he challenged any fair-minded man to contradict him when he spirit had that pledge been kept. It was, unfortunately, true that the young unmarried men had not come forward as it was hoped they would do, and there was no doubt that in some of the reserved occupations there were large numbers of young anmarried men who were eligible for the Army. Every step that could possibly be taken was being taken to deal with them. The War Office was on their track.

The law had been passed, and the Go

MEN.

Mr. LLOYD GEORGE, replying for Mr. Asquith to a question by Mr. Snowden, as to the moratorium for married men called to the Colours, said that all aspects of the question were being carefully considered. He was afraid he could not yet say definitely when it would be possible to make an announcement upon this exceptionally complex question.

young to get old age pensions and too old to get fresh employment. What the future of these poor people may be I cannot say. In other cases I see "patriotic" persons, living entirely on uncarned incomes, with large reserves, going about in very shabby clothes and hoarding up their incomes, after dismissing, ag usual, some of their servants, and giving little or no employment. I am not inclined to think that these people are investing their savings in War Loan, although they might do worse. It well-to-do people wish to dismiss their servants, cut down employment, get less clothes, and hoard up their cash, by all means let them do so, but let them cease trying to persuade us that it is on "patriotic grounds."—Yours, etc. rounds."—Yours, etc.,

SHEEP-DIPPING.

SHEEP-DIPPING.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

Sin,—Allow me to express the opinion of the sheep owners of the County Galway (to whom on the owners of the County Galway (to whom one fifth of the sheep of Ireland belong) on the new Sheep-Dipping Order, under which Mr. T. W. Russell means to enforce two dippings in fourteen days. We consider it unnecessary and injurious. This organisation has repeatedly passed resolutions, which were sent to the Department and published, showing reasons for this view, but they are ignored by Mr. Russell.

Fermit me also to correct a statement of Mr. T. W. Russell's in reference to the cost of the new Sheep-Dipping Order for a pointing inspectors, etc. "He had heard of o man in Galway who declared that the cost would be £30,000. Why did not that man say it to would cost thirty millions?" Mr. Russell is would cost thirty millions?" Mr. Russell is profit the statement. The statement was published in the daily Press as taken from a resolution of the Mayo County Committee of Agriculture, condemning Mr. Russell's new Order. The amount which they stated it would cost was £50,000, which was rightly quoted in a published letter of mine in the daily Press and weekly agricultural papers. If Mr. Russell papers, how can the public rely on his doing what is right in the serious business of the Department? His views seem to change very quickly. At the meeting where the above statement was made he first declined to allow the deputation to suggest that the police would assist, and immediately afterwards asked them to petition the Inspector-General for aid.—Yours, etc.,
